How Autreat is different from typical autism conferences

Typical autism conferences are about autistic people, but are primarily for the benefit of researchers, service providers, or families. Autreat is an opportunity for autistic people and those with related developmental differences, our friends, and supporters to come together, discover and explore autistic connections, and develop advocacy skills, all in an autistic-friendly environment. Family members and professionals are welcome to attend, but the structure and content of this event are determined by the interests and sensibilities of autistic people.

Things you will not find at Autreat:

- Crowded, noisy hotel or conference center
- Exhausting, intensive schedule
- Inescapable sensory bombardment
- Pressure to interact if you don't want to
- Focus on "celebrities"
- Focus on causes, cures, or ways to make us more normal

Things you will find at Autreat:

- Small college campus with plenty of outdoor space to get away and be alone or with friends.
- Smoke-free, perfume-free environment
- Opportunity to explore autistic social contacts, if desired
- Respect for the choice to be left alone, if preferred
- Focus on positive aspects of autism
- Child care for autistic and non-autistic children ages four and up
- Four days of continuous immersion in an autistic-friendly environment

The Facility

Autreat is held in the Bradford campus of University of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, approximately 80 miles from Buffalo. The nearest major airport is in Buffalo, New York. There is a small regional airport in Bradford that receives incoming flights from Cleveland, Ohio. The campus has plenty of open space for walking, recreation, and enjoying the outdoors. It has air-conditioned lodging in apartment-style residence halls. Apartments have three bedrooms, with two twin-size beds per bedroom. Each apartment also has two bathrooms, a lounge, and a kitchenette with a small refrigerator and a microwave oven. A limited number of apartments have a single queen-size bed instead of two twin-size ones. Private rooms are available at an extra cost and as space allows. Wheelchair-accessible facilities are available.

Partial Registration Options

Fee adjustments are available if you live nearby or wish to stay in a motel off-site and commute to Autreat during the days, or if you wish to provide your own meals instead of having meals in the Autreat dining hall. We can provide a list of nearby motels and restaurants.

If you want to attend only part of Autreat, not all four days, you may register for days only (no lodging). Please see comments in the registration fees section.

If you need personal assistance

ANI is not able to provide personal assistance for people who need help caring for themselves or participating in this program.

If you need help with self-care, communication, orientation, or behavior management, please make your own arrangements to have someone with you to assist you.

Contact ANI or check our web site for more information about this policy.

A special note about social interactions

For some ANI members, meeting other autistic people and having a chance to socialize with others like ourselves is an exciting and wonderful experience. Others are not interested in social contacts and may come to this event just for the presentations. Some of us are interested in socializing some, but need to be able to take time out from interacting. Autreat is meant to provide opportunity, but not pressure, for social interactions.

If you are coming to meet other autistic people, please understand that some people will also want to meet you, but some will not be into meeting people, and their own choice must also be respected.

If you want to come but do not want to meet or talk to people, you are still welcome to attend. You will be given a color-coded badge which you can use to indicate if you want to be approached only by people you already know, or don't want to be approached at all by anyone.

If you are a parent, a teacher, or service provider, and are bringing an autistic child or student or client because you hope the person will make social connections with others, please adopt the same position of providing opportunity, but not pressure.

The Autreat community will acknowledge and celebrate our newly adult members. Young adults ages 18-22, or whose 18th birthday will occur during 2009, are invited to participate in this ceremony. All Autreat attendees are invited to attend and celebrate with us.
